

The United States was the first country to sign a technical cooperative agreement with the Government of Nepal in 1951. In the last 59 years, the United States has provided more than $1.2 billion in development assistance to Nepal. Working jointly with the government and other donor agencies, we have achieved remarkable development outcomes including improvements in child and maternal mortality, malaria elimination in the Terai, and income-generating potential of the poorest of the poor.

Over the next five years, USAID will provide at least $205 million to Nepal. These funds will be used to build peace, strengthen democracy and governance, improve health services, support economic growth and education, and assist with humanitarian crises. In 2010, we will expand programming to: help reduce poverty and increase food security; address the impacts of global climate change; and strengthen health services.
